

Motherhood Mastery

by Lady Carla Davis, MPH

Specializing in Nutrition

GEP Minister for Environment

Throughout history, few cultures, if any, valued Motherhood Mastery. Why is that? You would think by now, society would realize the importance and value of motherhood.

Some of our largest species, such as whales and elephants, highly value the mastery of their matriarch and motherhood. They know the survival of their species, and each generation depends on the wisdom and skills passed down through their matriarch and motherhood.

In the human species, knowledge, skills, and wisdom of motherhood are passed to each new generation, from the grandmother to mother to daughter. If this motherhood bond breaks, the survival of each generation suffers and dies out.

When the human bond is destroyed, children become captive by globalists striving to dehumanize humanity for their control. A recent interview by the brilliant Gregg Braden describes the Spiritual Battle for Our Humanity in detail.

Think for a moment and imagine a world without mothers. For many, it would be unthinkable. The survival of the human species depends on the love and nurturing a mother is meant to provide - I call this Motherhood Mastery!

The most critical time for life's foundation is the first nine months in the womb and the first three years of a child's life. After that, the focus is on growth, development, and maintenance. If a mother's body is not well prepared, relaxed, nourished, and free from toxic chemicals and stress during this time, her offspring and each generation will be disadvantaged. Why is this simple, common-sense knowledge and law of Nature not valued or taught in schools?

Immediately following birth, the mother's first food nourishment for her offspring is colostrum produced by her mammary glands. Colostrum is rich in antibodies and white blood cells that give her offspring the best possible start to life. Colostrum antibodies protect her newborn against disease and infection. It also contains immune and growth factors and other bioactive compounds that help to activate her baby's immune system. They also jumpstart gut function and seed a healthy gut microbiome in the first few days of life. They are essential for a baby's health, growth, and vitality. Colostrum also contains small messenger peptides (cytokines) that control the functioning of the immune system along with growth factors of every kind. Breastfeeding within the first hour of life protects the newborn from acquiring infections. It also reduces the risk of death during the neonatal period. Yet, this knowledge is rarely known by mothers.

For the first six months of life, a mother's breastmilk is the best primary source of infant nutrition. In the right balance, it contains fats, proteins, carbohydrates, minerals, vitamins, and substances to protect against infection and inflammation. It contributes to the healthy development of an infant's immune system and gut microbiome. During breastfeeding, mother and baby bond, mostly by the sense of touch. Breastmilk provides vital nourishment for the first six months of life and up to two years old.

Mother's milk and the food she feeds her offspring for survival and well-being depend on her food choices and good nutrition. Good nutrition during pregnancy and breastfeeding can prevent most of today's diseases.

Statue of Mother with Children at the Monumental Cemetery of Staglieno

Food is a substance that nourishes and promotes growth. Thus, if a product doesn't do that, it is not a food but a pollutant.

Take a good look at the shape of your child's face and body, bone structure, teeth, dental arch, hair, skin, nails, tongue, and alertness. The outer self is a reflection of the inner self. Diet is the simplest, single most important factor affecting a child's behavior, mental development, health, and physical body.

Before and shortly after WW2, schools had classes on home economics that taught motherhood skills. Unfortunately, these classes ceased when the junk food industry grew and became more influential with government regulators and educators.

Historically, the role of women was being a mother and wife, expected to dedicate most of her energy to these roles and the home. While these roles were vital, women had no rights and little respect, which brought about the women's suffrage movement. Like other movements, it was hijacked by the powerful banking cartel who sought more tax revenue. With support from their Hollywood agents and MSMedia, they radically changed the vital role and value of motherhood and future generations. Instead of improving women's lives and motherhood, women became sex symbols or overworked slaves in an unhappy trap. This social engineering discarded femininity and portrayed motherhood as insignificant.

Medical regulators controlled by big pharma hijacked the role of motherhood, claiming they were the experts. Making huge profits, they took control of a child's diet, childcare, education, health, and medical care. Their vaccine protocol has been a big part of their racket while they continued to deny that a mother knows best! Now, everywhere, we see the disastrous consequences of what happens when motherhood is hijacked. Traditional values are being decimated, chronic diseases and environmental degradation are rampant, teen suicides are soaring, parents are losing control, families are split, and wars are never-ending.

Adding to this assault, many mothers are forced to work outside the home just to survive or help pay the bills because of the constant increases in life's necessities. These changes and financial stresses have also contributed to the breakdown of families and single motherhood, and in turn, the destruction of Motherhood Mastery.

Daycare does not take the place of 'mothering' infants and toddlers, no matter how good they are, which is a big part of why there are so many social and psychological problems and violence in today's society. No one in government is properly addressing this massive void nor establishing programs that acknowledge the vital role of motherhood in society. The only remedy their medical advisors and so-called 'experts' provide for the high increase in suicides and violence is more medication, which turns millions of people into zombies.

Worse, mothers are losing control of their kids at an alarming rate because of tyrannical government policies (under the guise of 'protecting others') that do not value or respect a mother's instinct and wisdom. Instead, they treat mothers like idiots, mandate an unethical 'one size fits all' protocol, push more drugs, and often deny mothers the right to raise their children. Those implementing this 'social engineering,' in collaboration with the film, TV, music, media, medical system, and giant food industry, have much to answer for. A recent Tucker Carlson interview with Russian philosopher, author Aleksandr Dugin describes what is behind this agenda. Why are Prof. Dugin's books banned in the USA?

In Western countries, warfare and soldiers are glorified all year long, decade after decade, with billions of dollars spent on media spin, weapons, war memorials, and monuments, whereas motherhood, mothers, and mothering hardly ever get recognition, funding, or monuments built in their honor.

Below are a dozen reasons why motherhood is so VITAL!

1. From the heart, mothers tirelessly commit their lives to their offspring and family.
2. Mothers create a beautiful, safe home environment for the whole family.
3. Mothers are devoted to nurturing and nourishing their offspring, which enables them to grow and develop properly.
4. Mothers make many sacrifices and work hard (with no pay) for the health, well-being, and betterment of their offspring and family.
5. Mothers protect their offspring, help keep them safe, and teach them survival methods.
6. Mothers discipline and guide their offspring in the right direction
7. Mothers are the emotional backbone of their offspring and families.
8. Mothers lift the spirit of and encourage their offspring when they are down and make the best of friends.
9. Mothers spend a lifetime educating, worrying, and caring about their offspring.
10. Mothers inspire and support their offspring to fulfill their dreams.

11. Mothers are role models for their offspring.
12. Mothers love their offspring unconditionally.

How a culture nourishes its children and values motherhood determines what each future generation will be like. The role of motherhood encompasses a tremendous responsibility that needs to be taken seriously with more attention than just celebrating Mother's Day once a year.

In Nature, including Mother Earth, everything has a balance of feminine and masculine energy. Energy balance is explained in the I-Theory, by His Holiness Swami Isa. Through his IVPT Trust, he is revolutionizing education with his Education for Total Consciousness pilot program that honors traditional values.

Motherhood should always be highly valued and treated with respect 24/7, all year. The feminine energy from motherhood mastery is vital because the next generation and humanity depend on it for survival. It is a necessary part of every aspect of life, including reproduction. Future generations, a better world, and the survival of our species depend on how well each of us values and respects the vital role of Motherhood Mastery.

Bringing truth to light is the only way to address the cause and, in turn, find solutions.

We are no different from anything else in Nature. Thus, if you pollute the soil, you produce diseased and sickly crops, unable to nourish or reproduce. Polluted foods contain harmful chemicals and little nutrition. If you pollute a child, the same thing happens.

Nourish your child or children with what Mother Nature has blessed us with. For every junk food, there is usually a healthy alternative. Strong, healthy people make strong, healthy, happy families. Strong, healthy, happy families make strong, healthy happy, productive nations.

Mothers and grandmothers are special, important people because the next generation depends on them for nourishment, care, and survival. Learn the Mastery of Motherhood, vital for the survival and well-being of yourself, your children and family, and future generations. If you choose to become a mother, take the responsibility of Motherhood Mastery seriously and stay in harmony with Mother Nature.

I think we can learn a lot from Native Americans, especially the Hopi and Iroquois, who highly value the role of women and the Mastery of Motherhood. Below is an excerpt from wikipedia:

The Iroquois Confederacy or League, combining five to six Native American Haudenosaunee nations or tribes before the U.S. became a nation, operated by The Great Binding Law of Peace, a constitution by which women participated in the League's political decision-making, including deciding whether to proceed to war,<sup>[96]</sup> through what may have been a matriarchy<sup>[97]</sup> or gynocracy.<sup>[98]</sup> According to Doug George-Kanentiio, in this society, mothers exercise central moral and political roles.

[99] The dates of this constitution's operation are unknown; the League was formed in approximately 1000–1450, but the constitution was oral until written in about 1880.

[100] The League still exists.

George-Kanentiio explains:

In our society, women are the center of all things. Nature, we believe, has given women the ability to create; therefore, it is only natural that women be in positions of power to protect this function... We traced our clans through women; a child born into the world assumed the clan membership of its mother. Our young women were expected to be physically strong... The young women received formal instruction in traditional planting... Since the Iroquois depended on the crops they grew, whoever controlled this vital activity wielded great power within our communities. It was our belief that since women were the givers of life, they naturally regulated the feeding of our people... In all countries, real wealth stems from the control of land and its resources. Our Iroquois philosophers knew this as well as we knew natural law. To us, it made sense for women to control the land since they were far more sensitive to the rhythms of Mother Earth. We did not own the land but were custodians of it. Our women decided any and all issues involving territory, including where a community was to be built and how the land was to be used... In our political system, we mandated full equality. Our leaders were selected by a caucus of women before the appointments were subject to popular review... Our traditional governments are composed of an equal number of men and women. The men are chiefs and the women clan-mothers... As leaders, the women closely monitor the actions of the men and retain the right to veto any law they deem inappropriate... Our women not only hold the reins of political and economic power, but they also have the right to determine all issues involving the taking of human life. Declarations of war had to be approved by the women, while treaties of peace were subject to their deliberations.[99]

© 2024 Lady Carla Davis - www.NourishingBasics.com